Supporting family well-being

Faith-based organizations have a role to play in supporting the health and well-being of their members. Promoting positive choices and healthy minds, bodies and relationships not only helps individuals and families, but also strengthens congregations as well.

Michigan State University (MSU) Extension offers educational programs that empower people to make positive choices and move toward well-being.

Our programs teach healthy relationships and parent education, good health at every stage of life, nutrition and food safety, management of diabetes and other chronic diseases — and more.

Expert resources in your community
We are educators, helping people improve their lives by bringing MSU's vast knowledge and resources directly to individuals, families and communities. Our programs are appropriate for all income levels and family situations.

We're local, accessible and ready to work with you and your parishioners on relevant health issues.

Impact-driven programs
MSU Extension offers effective and evidence-based programs that lead to measurable behavior change.

As a result of your program, our adults are more open to understanding young people, and the youth seem to better recognize how much concern and care the adults have for their safety.

Before I started this class, I was on two different types of blood pressure medicine, and I am younger than age 30. Now I am extremely happy to say that I am on no type of blood pressure medicine.
