Deployment involves moving an individual or military unit within the country or to another country. A mission or task might include training, supporting communities during times of disaster, helping foreign countries or fighting in a war. The many changes happening with each departure and return create difficulties for both service members and their families.

PRE-DEPLOYMENT ACTIVITIES
• Make a calming jar together. To make fill a mason jar with glitter glue, glitter, water and food coloring (let them choose the colors!). Put the top on and shake it up! When your child gets upset they can shake it up and then wait until the glitter settles to the bottom giving them time to calm down.
• Write a list of things that you can do when you feel mad. In the book, the bunnies talked about how having quiet time, deep breathing, running or riding bikes helped them. What are things you can do when you are mad?

DURING-DEPLOYMENT ACTIVITIES
• Make a feeling book or feeling chart. Draw or take different pictures of emotions that you might feel while your service member is gone. You can use the faces to show family members what you are feeling.
• Keep a written or picture journal of your feelings. Draw pictures or write down how you are feeling and what made you feel that way. Talk about how you felt and what you did to feel better.
• Use different colors of paper to show each emotion (red=angry, blue=sad). Allow children to choose the color of paper they are feeling to draw pictures on.

POST-DEPLOYMENT ACTIVITIES
• Make calming jars for each person in the family. Talk about how the family can use them when they are upset. To make fill a mason jar with glitter glue, glitter, water and food coloring (let them choose the colors!). Put the top on and shake it up!
• As a family, set up a quiet spot for family members to use when they are angry. Put soft pillows or blankets to lay or sit on. Include paper and crayons for drawing or writing. Have books to read and music to listen to in the quiet spot.
